WORTH QUOTING

Many a woman drags a month's salary along the street and then scolds her husband because he will not turn up his trousers, sneers Judge.

When Emerson meets Poe in the Elysian fields does he still speak of him as the "jingle poet?" asks the Louisville Courier-Journal.

Rhetorically speaking, declares the New York American, the "higher law" sounds much better than the "unwritten law."

Since epicurean arguments have come into vogue, suggests the Washington Star, the mikado might be complimented by some assurance that the Japanese persimmon is a favorite fruit.

It's a bad business—that of stealing land from a country, admits the Atlantic Constitution, but fencing in the world and calling it your is considered a big thing.

The Boston Transcript suggests:
The gift to the Library of Congress of the Chinese Encyclopaedia, complete in 5,000 volumes, will be a great aid to congressmen in their researches.

It would be a wise provision, urges the Indianapolis News, if a jury's acquittal of a prisoner charged with homicide could be accompanied by the proviso that he forfeits his gun-carrying license.

The Chattanooga Times says "we shall be happy when the day of the hypocrite shall pass." That is to say, infers the Louisville Courier-Journal, when we're inside the pearly gates, and the hypocrite is on the outside?

It's the man who talks about the ice cold baths he takes every morning, cynically remarks the New York Press, that thinks he is being murdered with draughts if anybody lets some fresh air into the room.

A Connecticut scientist blandly remarks that in two million years men and women will have wheels instead of feet for purposes of locomotion.
That's a far cry, comments the New York Herald, but there is a strong suspicion that some folks already have wheels—but at the other end of their anatomy.

If there is anything in suggestion, and we know there is, asserts the Christian Register, then the accounts of crime, displayed, as they are, in our newspapers, must increase the number of criminals. One indication of this fact is the way in which crimes of specific and peculiar kinds "have a run" for a time and then cease.

Ex-Governor John C. Sheppard has been telling the bar association of South Carolina that in his opinion the effective, satisfactory administration of justice would be greatly promoted by permitting trial judges to deal with the facts as well as the law in their charges to the jurors, and by doing away with the requirement that a jury's verdict must be unanimous.

Sawing all the wood by gasoline engine has its offsets, thinks the American Cultivator. Many a boy learned persistence and staying power bending over the saw horse. But get the sawing outfit just the same. The world moves and there will always be plenty of work without trying to compete with horse, steam or gasoline.

There are orange groves here that are paying from $100 to $1,000 per acre.

A Boston gentleman came down in December for his health, bought 10 acres of land for $500, had it set out to oranges and grapefruit; and before he left in spring could have sold at enough profit to have paid all his expenses for the winter. He refused to sell.
